NATCH vs. THE LAW

THE sun was bright, the air felt good and so did Natch Kilroy, as he trotted into the park, clad airily in shorts and a T-shirt. "My last chance to practice before the race this afternoon," he said, adjusting his sneakers. "Guess I'll limber up by trottin' around the oval a coupla times!"

With a spring in his heels and a lift in his soles, Natch started out around the wide park oval. "What a day!" he said, inhaling deeply. "What a—"

"What a nerve!" a voice close to Natch cut in. "Kilroy, ain'tcha ashamed ta be out in public in yer underwear?"

Startled, Natch found himself staring into a deep frown on the face of the toughest motorcycle cop in town—and Judy's pop, yet!

"That isn't my underwear—" he started to explain, but the law wouldn't wait for excuses or explanations.

"You're comin' with me, young fella-melad," said the determined policeman. "I'll put ya behind bars 'til yer folks come around with some decent clothes!"

"But—but—" all Natch's "butting" wouldn't work. In less than ten minutes, he found himself the lone occupant of a very small cell with very thick bars. "An' here ya stay, sonny!" Judy's father said coldly, turning the key.

In vain, Natch had tried to explain all about the race and the honor of the school, the town and the fair name of Kilroy. Judy's father had no time for such nonsense, as he paused to make his report to the Police Captain at the desk.

"I just ran in a kid—" he started to say, when the Captain interrupted him.

"Don't talk business ta me," he said impatiently. "I got other stuff on my mind! I got ten bucks riding on the school race this afternoon, an' I'm gonna be awful sour if that Kilroy kid don't come through. Awful sour!"

"You—don't—say!" A horrible realization came to Judy's pop. "Er, excuse me, Cap!"

Quickly, he fled back to the little cell where Natch suffered untold agonies. "Wat're ya sittin' there for?" the cop demanded of the astounded Natch. "Don'tcha know there's a race today?"

Natch could scarcely believe what was happening to him. He, Natch Kilroy, was carefully propped on the back of a police department motorcycle, and personally escorted to the race!

"We made it!" the anxious cop sighed, relieved. "Now, get in there an' win—if not for yourself, if not for the school—then for my Captain, who's gonna be awful sour if ya lose!"

Natch sprinted for the starting line, and never stopped sprinting until the race was won—and he—the pride of the Kilroys, the winner!

Judy's father gave him a triumphant ride home. "You're a good kid, Natch," he said, patting him on the shoulder. "An' if yer ever tempted ta tell how a certain cop run ya in on a certain charge—don't!"

"I won't," Natch said, "I really won't tell—hey, what's this?"

"The price of yer silence," said the tough cop, slipping Natch a crisp, new five-dollar bill.

Caught SHORT

"OH, brother!" Jackson exulted as he strode down the street. "Two big moments on one and the same day!"

He hurried towards the Men's and Boys' Suitere, that last precious dollar clenched in his fist. For eight whole months, Jackson had been plunking down a dollar a week for the snappiest checked number in town. And now, with the big school dance scheduled for that very evening, and the final payment in his pocket—Jackson was walking on air!

A new suit and the big dance—together! He entered the Suitere, waved the dollar at Mr. Tilcher and said, "Wrap 'er up! I'm takin' 'er to where she belongs!"

Clutching the bulky parcel, Jackson raced home to get all duded up for the dance. As he scrubbed under the shower, he recalled all the odd jobs he had done to earn himself that terrific suit.

First it was lawn-mowing. "Boy," he remembered, "I kin still feel that charley-horn from ol' Mrs. Gribble's mower! What a truck that was!"

As Jackson gave himself a brisk towel rubdown, he thought of the grocery deliveries he had made. "Oh, them bundles!" he moaned. "Each an' every one loaded with lead! I sure sweated out those tips!"

Diving into his underwear, poor Jackson recalled the most horrible experience of them all—baby-sitting! "Little Snookums!" he muttered scornfully, slicking his hair down in the back and rolling it up in the front. "That wasn't a baby—it wuz a monster! An' what's more, I got the scars to prove it!" Little Snookums had had some very new teeth, and he had tried them all out—on Jackson's nose! "I think I can still see the bite mark," Jackson reminisced, leaning close to the mirror.

"Oh, well, let bygones be bygones. It was worth it! Yessir! An' I'd do it all over again if I hadda—just to own this drape shape!" He looked fondly at the new suit, stretched out on his bed. "Eight months of solid sufferin', but I did it an' I'm glad!"

Making certain no one was around, Jackson sprayed some eau de cologne on his face. He had made himself a temporary loan of his mother's perfume atomizer.

"Now for the big moment! Suit—here I come!"

Lifting his new suit tenderly, Jackson worked himself into the trousers—then the vest—and finally, the jacket! He did not feel entirely happy, but he thought that perhaps the shock of owning the suit at last was a bit too much for him.

And then—and then—Jackson looked at his reflection in the mirror!

"Murder," he moaned, "it's a solid murder! Th' pants are two inches too short—an' kinda tight all over! The sleeves are crawlin' up around my elbows someplace! Why, oh, why didn't my mamma done tol' me that a boy kin grow an awful lot in eight months? An awful lot!"

C'MON, JACKSON-- I GOT MORE LAWN TO CUT!

I CAN'T-- I GOTTA GO GET MY HEAD EXAMINED!

YES, WHERE ARE THE CHILDREN?

MEANWHILE--
HELLO, ENNY! DID YOU GET ALL YOUR SHOPPING DONE?

OH, KATIE'S GONE OVER TO NANCY'S--AND I GUESS NATCH IS OUT CUTTING LAWN! HE TRIED TO GET TWO DOLLARS FROM ME TO TAKE HIS GIRL TO THE SHOW THIS EVENING, BUT I TURNED HIM DOWN! TOLD HIM HE'D HAVE TO GET OUT AND EARN HIS SPENDING MONEY! TOLD HIM I CAN'T BE PAYING HIS GIRLS WAY INTO ANY SHOW! HA-HA!

YOU'RE RIGHT, EDGAR! NATCH IS BIG ENOUGH TO EARN HIS OWN SPENDING MONEY!

THERE'S THE PHONE!

R-B-RING!

NATCH ISN'T HERE NOW, JUDY! BUT I'LL GIVE HIM YOUR MESSAGE AS SOON AS HE GETS HOME! 'BYE!

MOTHER'S LITTLE HELPER

"NOW, see here, Judy!" Her mother's voice was quite angry. "You're not going to get out of helping me this time! Every time there's some housecleaning to do, you seem to have a very important date—someplace else!"

Judy had to admit, shamefacedly, that her mother was right. "But, gee whiz, mom," she promised, "today will be entirely different! Today, I'll help you every bit I can, honestly!"

Wrapping herself in a huge apron, Judy caught up a fistful of dust cloths and some furniture polish. "I'll start in the living room, mother," she called.

As she started to dust the magazine rack, Judy noticed a copy of her favorite comics book peeking out from among the other magazines. "Wow!" she exclaimed. "It's the new COOKIE—this, I gotta read!" By the time Judy had finished the last story (which she read three times), she was astonished to see that her mother had finished doing the living room.

"Sorry, mom," she apologized, "I was swept away! But don't worry about the upstairs, will you? I'll start on your bedroom right now!"

Up in the bedroom, Judy noticed a fascinating new fact—her mother had bought some new hats! "Here goes for a fashion show," she said, brushing her hair smooth. "Bet this one with the roses will be positively too-too!"

Somehow, while Judy was trying on the new hats, and practicing new hair-do's to go with them, her mother seemed to have gotten through most of the upstairs rooms.

"There's still the kitchen, mother," she called cheerily. "I can do that in no time flat! Just watch me—I does everything!"

Armed with a can of cleanser and a large cloth, Judy set out to polish up the kitchen—but there again, she found that something new had definitely been added. "Yummm," she murmured, lifting the lid of the cookie jar. "Fresh ginger snaps! What I couldn't do with a little refreshment!"

She poured a tall glass of milk and went to work on the cookie jar. It seemed only a few minutes later when Judy looked up to see her mother mopping the floor. "Oh, mom," she said reproachfully. "You shouldn't!"

Judy started to take the mop from her mother's hands, when the phone rang out in the front hall. "Don't bother, mother, I'll get it," she said, running towards the phone.

"Hello?" she said, lifting the receiver. "Uh-huh, it's me. My goodness, you don't say so! Really? She did? And what did he say? Really? He did?"

A half-hour later, the phone call was over. Judy collapsed weakly into an armchair in the living room and remarked to her mother, "Honestly, mom, the house is spotless, but I'm exhausted! I never realized housework could be so tough!"

Judy's mom smiled.
